indtag. This procedure, in which the government follows only Order No. 124, is without material foundation, since that order actually applies only to sequestration and temporary administration of some categories of property, "for the purpose of preventing the theft and other misuse of property formerly belonging to the Hitler state and military authorities, anions, clubs, and associations banned and dissolved by the Soviet Military Command and for the purpose of a rational utilization of this property for the needs of the local population and the occupation forces."

4. German officials further protest that the procedure is in complete disregard of the constitution of Land Saxony-Anhalt of 10 January 1947, which provides property guarantee and permits expropriations only for the general welfare and on legal grounds. Ministerial Director Schlobach, permanent secretary of the cabinet and head of the Constitution Division of the Ministry of Interior, had the illegality of the processes pointed out to him and agreed to speak to the minister president about it. As a result, the following

"The Deputy Minister President and Minister of Interior make known the written order of the President of the Central German Commission for Sequestration and Requisitioning in the Soviet Occupation Zone, dated 8 March 1948, with the following contents:

"In reference to your letter of 6 March 1948, I can confirm to you that the operations of the Commission sent by us to Saxony-Anhalt on orders of SMA Germany were carried out in order to facilitate the conclusion of sequestration work based on Order No. 124 and to provide, once more before its completion, a comprehensive survey of the system of execution of Order No. 124. I can further assume you that the execution of Order No. 124 was always conducted independently of the Landtag, and no Landtag in the zone could in any way have exercised a decisive influence on the execution of this order."

"The cabinet acknowledged this letter and decided that the comment was not entirely satisfactory, since the letter did not contain any written confirmation of the commission, already given orally, under which the Land government had executed the sequestration measures on the orders of the occupation power and the Central German Commission for Sequestration and Requisitioning."

- 5. Up to the end of March 1943, the government in Halle had been unable to obtain any written confirmation for its expropriation decrees through the Central German Commission or through SMA Germany. German officials not involved feel that the Government showed itself incompetent to deal with SMA and Communist tactics and should have obtained a written order from SMA before taking any action in so serious a matter.
- 6. The strongest supporters of expropriations outside the Industrie Werke were the consumers' unions, which appear to have an insatiable desire for property. Their influence had advanced so much that they were able to have put on the list of new expropriations the large wool storehouse (Wollhalle) in halle; the well-known Schubert bread factory in Halle, a prosperous family enterprise which had been previously expropriated and restored; and property in Wittenberg for one of their branches. It was reported that some trustees appointed by the Ministry of Interior for newly expropriated firms had occupied not only the business property involved but the residence and household appointments of the former owners.
- 7. The transfer of control of sequestered property from the Einistry of Economy to the Hinistry of Interior was, according to source, obviously for the purpose of strengthening the position of Communist elements at the expense of other lightles, through grants to SED and its satellite organizations. The Sequestration Division received instructions by telephone from the Minister of Interior to the effect that SMA Karlshorst had informed the Land leadership of SED that the Land government of Saxony-Anhalt could dispose of all confiscated property according to its own judgment. The Sequestration Division, however, requested a written confirmation of this order before taking action.

- Socialization has been employed. Private firm owners, by this method, are allowed such small quotas of materials for manufacture, products, etc., that they must operate with a permanent deficit and finally are forced to abandon their enterprises. An example is the Wollmer merchandising house in Halle. Similar results are expected from the ordinance of the German Central Administration for Finance, published in the Legal Gazette of Land Saxony-Anhalt, Part I, of 21 February 1948, which was misleadingly inscribed as Price Ordinance No. 63, on inserting trade unions and factory councils into price control. It actually aims not only at price 25X1 regulation but at control of all production and sales by factory councils, as appears from Item 2 of the ordinance, which states that factory councils are charged with seeing that raw materials delivered are to be completely utilized in production, that products manufactured are to correspond in quantity, quality, and type with the raw materials delivered, that products are regularly disposed of, that the sale price is determined according to regulations, and that complete information is available on sales of raw materials and manufactured products from accounting records of the producing or sellengism.
- 9. Attachment A gives a statement of the property values in question for sequestration. Attachments B-D show the extent of reparations orders and also the development of 25X1 production of SAGs. Comparisons are made with the previous month, but price increases granted as a privilege to SAGs and subsidies charged to the domestic economy were not counted by SMA in the total reparations debt.

It should be observed in this tabulation that the figures under quota are the same for the amounts to be delivered by 31 March 1948 only for credit payments, and that the reparations amounts and total differ from the figures given in the March report. Similarly, the figures for Soviet AGs in credit payment remain the same as in the March report, but the reparations figures differ for the two months. No reason can be given for the discrepancies between the two sets of figures for 31 March 1948 except that the quota might have been changed between the two dates.
